ASU.[Optimization of synthesis conditions for an ELISA test for the detection of autoantibodies to acetylcholine receptors and alpha-bungarotoxin]. Antibodies to acetylcholine receptors and alpha-bungarotoxin are diagnostic markers for myasthenia gravis. The aim of our work is to optimize the process of ELISA test for anti-AChR and anti-alpha-BGT antibodies. For optimization of the pre-analytic and analytic phases the optimum concentration of antigens, conjugate and polyclonal antibodies were selected. Pre-analytical variables as antibody storage and temperature, duration of incubation and the time interval between samples collection and assay testing were also optimized. Higher IgG titers were detected in patients serum samples tested by ELISA with rAChR, with rAChR, alpha-BGT, alpha-BGT and rBuTx in the linear range of concentration from 10 to 20 ng/

On a pleasant Wednesday evening a train like this would probably be pulling a few steel cars filled with tourists from the city, going to SkyTrain (Vancouver's underground system) to take in the sights and sounds of the rapidly urbanizing town of Maryhill. But as George Douglas, one of the recently retired people who often meets in the station, says in one of the anecdotes that make this Thursday night's gathering a special one, "The city didn't find it worth making a tunnel, and so we are stuck with the 1960s train station," despite the tunnel going under the Fraser River, and the SkyTrain running no further west. The history of Maryhill is important to Vancouver, and the people who share the space around the old
