I have the CD from the package that came with my laptop...Though it's still an iffy proposition, the idea of populating artificial galaxies has been around for a while. The Black Hole Galaxy, a swirl of blue and purple nebulae first observed by NASA's Wide Field Infrared Survey Explorer, serves as a pretty good example of what people think a proto-galaxy can look like. But normally, scientists think of real galaxies as having a spherical shape. A spherical form lets stars orbit every which way and those stars stay in perfect alignment. This alignment creates a nice gravity well for more stars to gravitate to. But when a new star is formed, it's not forming in a perfect spherical shape. It's more of an oblong shape. If it gets too far away from that, gravity starts pushing the stars away from each other. Once stars get too far away, they start to orbit in different directions, and the entire shape begins to rot. An oblong galaxy isn't spherical. We know that oblong galaxies like our own are a real thing.
